Last updated: January 14, 2020

Introduction

Smoov is an app that is provided to you by Allego. Smoov makes your life easier, because you will always be able to find an available charging station in your area, quickly and easily. You can see how much you are charging at any given time. Smoov also sends you notifications you when your favorite charging station becomes available, or when it is occupied. Soon, you will even be able to reserve a charging station with Smoov. In order for you to use our Smoov services, Allego has to process some categories of your personal data. Allego takes its responsibilities towards processing your personal data seriously. This Privacy Notice describes Allego's practices how we collect, use, disclose, transfer and store your personal data. It also outlines your privacy rights. Privacy is an ongoing responsibility, and so Allego will from time to time update this Privacy Notice in case Allego undertakes new practices with regard to processing personal data or adopt new privacy policies.

What Personal Data We Collect and How We Use It

Allego and its contracted third parties collect personal data from Smoov users. This personal data is limited to the kinds of information that is required in order to make use of Smoov services. The processing of your personal data is necessary if you want to make use of Smoov. This personal data can include initials, last name, email address, telephone number, Facebook account name, Google account name, charge card, bank account number and credit card number. Allego uses this personal data to provide you with our Smoov services, including remembering your preferred settings, payment for charging sessions, finding a charging station and (in the near future) reserving charging stations. Allego only shares your personal data with contracted third parties who are facilitating the delivery of Smoov services on behalf of Allego. In the following section an insight is given into: what personal data we process when logging into Smoov, using your location data, paying for charging sessions, and providing customer service.

When logging into Smoov

There are three ways in which you can use Smoov and Allego collects and processes your personal data for payment services. You decide which method you use.

Method #1: You can use Smoov as a guest. If you use Smoov as a guest, you don't have to register and provide your name or email address. When you use Smoov as a guest, you can use the app to search for charging stations and pay for charge sessions through direct payment (i.e. through your bank or credit card provider). Services like favorizing and monitoring of chargers will become available, even if you use Smoov as a guest. Personal preferences and charging session history can also be referenced. Personal data that is processed while using these services (like favorizing), will be erased each time when you close the Smoov app.

Method #2: You create an account in Smoov through your personal Facebook or Google account. In order to use your personal Facebook or Google account, you will need to log in via one of these accounts and allow Smoov to access your name. When logging in through Facebook or Google, these two providers also provide Allego automatically with your IP address of the location from which you log in into Smoov. Allego does not use this information and automatically deletes this after 90 days. The permission to use these accounts can always be revoked through your Facebook and Google accounts. When you log in into Smoov with one of these accounts, you can use the direct payment method, pay with a credit card or use your charge card issued by your Mobility Service Provider (MSP). Services like favorizing and monitoring of chargers will become available. Personal preferences and charging session history can also be referenced. When you close the app, your preferences, like favorizing charging, will be stored (unlike when you log in as a guest).

Note: when you log in into Smoov using this method, Facebook and Google stores information on the frequency of logging into/using Smoov. Allego does not share any information with Facebook or Google such as your personal preferences (such as payment method, car model, preferred chargers).

Method #3: You create an account by using your email account. You can create an account by using your email address. To do so, you must use your email address. When you log in into the Smoov app with your email address, you can use the direct payment method, pay with credit card or use your charge card issued by your Mobility Service Provider (MSP). The same as with logging in with Facebook or Google, services like favorizing and monitoring of chargers will become available. Personal preferences and charging session history can also be referenced. When you close the app, your preferences, like favorizing charging will be stored (unlike when you login as a guest).

When using your location data

You can use Smoov to locate, check availability, and (in the near future) reserve Allego charging stations. The default setting in Smoov is set to not track your location. If you want to use our service to look up, check availability, and (in the near future) reserve charging stations you must give explicit permission through Smoov on your phone to use your location. Allego does not store, nor track your location through this functionality. For this function, the terms and conditions as well as privacy settings of Google maps apply.

When adding your charge card to Smoov

To be able to use your charge card, you must enter your charge card number issued by your charge card service provider (i.e. Mobility Service Provider - MSP). Your charge card contains a unique number, which is linked to your personal account. This processing of this personal data is necessary for Allego and your service provider to enable you to charge your vehicle. Your charge card details are directly sent through a secured connection to the relevant service provider, enabling the charging sessions to be invoiced to your MSP. Your charging sessions that you carried out at Allego charging stations with your charge card are visible in your Smoov account.

Allego and your service provider share responsibilities with regard to the processing of your personal data. Please contact your service provider if you have any questions about how your service provider processes your personal information.

When paying for a charging session through the direct debit method

In order to use the direct debit payment method, you must carry out a SEPA registration with Allego's payment (service) provider through Smoov. In order to do so you must fill in: your initials, your last name, your IBAN (bank account number) and your email address. The processing of this information is necessary if you want to use this payment method. When you choose to charge your vehicle through a direct payment, your bank account details are sent directly through a secure connection to Allego's payment provider. Allego does not itself store the bank account information. However, Allego is able access payment data, for example for trouble shooting and carrying out reimbursements.

When paying for a charging session with a credit card

In order to use the credit card payment method, you must register your credit card with the payment (service) provider through Smoov. The processing of this information is necessary if you want to use this payment method. Your credit card information is provided by you directly and sent through a secure connection to Allego's payment provider, which follows the Payment Card Industry Data Security Standard (PCI DSS) when handling your credit card data. Allego does not, itself, process or store your credit card information. However, Allego is able access credit card payment data, for example for trouble shooting, reimbursements, etc.

We also gather aggregated (but not personally identifiable) information about charging sessions from Smoov users and use such aggregated information to our partners, service providers, and/or other third parties for improving Smoov (related) services.
